ENDING YOUR COUNSELLING

Ending without notice

If you miss two counselling sessions without contacting us to let us know we will advise you that your counselling contract has ended.

Ending your sessions

You can end your counselling contract at any time - however it is often considered valuable to plan an ending with your counsellor.

Changing your counsellor

If you chose to end with your counsellor because you wish to see another counsellor – you may be invited to an ending session that you can choose to attend. Otherwise we will return you to our waiting list and reallocate you as soon as we can.

IF COUNSELLING HAS TO END UNEXPECTEDLY DUE TO A CHANGE IN YOUR COUNSELLOR'S CIRCUMSTANCES

If your counselling has to end due to circumstances beyond your control, your counsellor will discuss this with you, plan an ending and then ask if you would like to remain in counselling with the service.

If you do wish to continue, it is our policy that clients take a three week break to reflect on the ending with your current counsellor before beginning with another. This three week break will commence when your current counselling ends. We will then return you to our Wait List and you will be given priority for reallocation to another counsellor.
